

OPINION

EDITORIAL

App can help protect us and speed way out

The progress made in the fight against COVID-19 in Australia, and in WA in particular, has been hugely impressive.

Yesterday's update showed that WA had gone for a second day with no new detected cases.

Every time the magic figure zero comes up is a cause for pride and another burst of optimism that the arrival of further eased restrictions is a step closer.

But Premier Mark McGowan, who has consistently urged caution, yesterday warned of uncertainty about the looming arrival of "hundreds and hundreds of Australians coming home, including West Australians", this week. Although the passengers will be quarantined in Perth hotels or Rottnest for two weeks once they arrive, it was a timely reminder that the need for vigilance is ongoing.

Which adds weight to calls to download the Federal Government's COVIDSafe thewest.com.au

Email opinion@wanews.com.au

Signed Alston prints are available from www.westpix.com.au or 9482 2378.

Viewing work change